Install idm by running "idman626build14.exe" Q: Make div fill body after being loaded with setTimeout I have created a script, that basically reloads the div every 5 seconds. In my case, the content is changed every 5 seconds, too. So, when you refresh the page, you reload the div again and again. What I want to accomplish is, that the container div fills the whole window. But, in my case the body height is calculated as soon as the JavaScript loaded. Therefore the body takes height 100%. How can I get a result that is supposed to happen after a 5 second delay? HTML: JS: function updateDiv() { setTimeout(function() { $("#mainContainer").load("newContent.html"); }, 5000); } function updateDiv() { setTimeout(function() { $("#mainContainer").load("newContent.html"); }, 5000); } A: I've added this in the script and it seems to work perfectly. The body is no longer taking 100% height. $(document).ready(function(){ setTimeout(function() { $("body").load("newContent.html"); }, 5000); });
