Voidspire Tactics is an indie turn-based Tactics RPG with a heavy emphasis on exploration, character progression, and highly tactical combat. Playable Races: The voidwalker is the dominant race in Voidspire Tactics, possessing devastating ranged attacks, area-of-effect damage, and multiple resistance skills. The spirewalker is more agile and powerful than their cousins, and similar to the voidwalker in most other ways. With piercing hits and healing skills, the saurian hunter thrives on killing and hunting. The unenlightened are weak but highly adaptable, learned quickly and have many uses. Faction:Unenlightened Classes: Warriors: Cultivators: Shiftcloaks: Dwarves: Thieves: Mercenaries: Spells: Healer: Minstrel: Alchemist: Alchemist Apprentice: Enchanter: You choose your role in advance, and are free to change classes when leveling up. Warriors specialize in the short range, cultivating a variety of abilities to deliver crippling attacks and rapidly develop an offensive form of magic. Cultivators are the ultimate ranged classes – proficient with any number of weapons and abilities – whether it's a powerful hammer in close quarters, a slow ranged poison or a multi-shot ranged blast. Shiftcloaks are adept at combat in both melee and ranged ranges, with damage-reducing attacks and potent defenses – even against powerful enemy mages. Dwarves specialize in close range combat with heavy armor and numerous powerful hit-and-run attacks. They're also the best in defensive combat thanks to quick healing skills and powerful poison skills. Thieves are a little slower and less durable than dwarves but have a quick recovery thanks to versatile and powerful spells. Mercenaries are the semi-specialists of the game – melee-focused and very flexible, they can be anything you like them to be, from extreme melee to hulking mass-ranged attacks. There are currently 6 classes. Additional classes will be available at a later date. Each class has a defined set of primary skills and specializations, enabling them to work together as an effective team. Voidspire Tactics is designed to be very easy to learn,

Download: A long time ago, in the golden age of mecha games, the game developers were looking into how to improve the over-the-shoulder-view camera angles used in the game, especially when there were many enemies on screen. This led to a new kind of gameplay, which would define the game Tiger Fighter '31. The game would take the player into a 2D plane, with enemies flying around the player in most areas. The enemies would fly over, under, and above the player, resulting in an interesting and complex new tactical aspect to play.The game itself was meant to be an experiment. We tried to focus on the idea of having a nice camera angle while the game was busy with shooting and fighting for the player. Later the game took on a life of its own, in many ways becoming what it is now. We called it a "live action" game, as this was the time where games were moving away from using sprites in a 2D plane (like Cowboy, Final Fight, and many others).While we would continue to develop the game, we would never finish it. Rather than selling the game, we would release patches here and there, which added new levels and weapons. Each patch also had a demo with the new weapons added, and therefore would allow our last players to experience how the game would look and play if we decided to finish the project.After years of searching, we finally found the source code of our 2D animation studio. Using the resources of the original version of the studio, we would port the game to the "next generation" engine, and create the final version of the game, which became Tiger Fighter "1931".This version had unique abilities for each of the new weapons added, like the Co2 missile, the laser, and the chaff. There would also be infinite laser ammo for each weapon. In the demo, the player could only carry one weapon, but as the game progressed, the player could equip up to four weapons, and at the end of each level of the demo, a new weapons would be added.Features:New "live action" camera angle New gameplay of shooting and fighting for the player

2Q: Mix methods and JSON responses in a 'pretty' way I have data that I'm trying to return that is more a query than a JSON response. I'm using '.toString()' to get around the JsonSerialization.serialize() limitation of only serializing java.lang.Object type objects. Is there a way to return a result like the following to the UI layer? { 'id':1, 'params': '{name: "George", home_town:"XXX"}' } The UI layer is just using JsonConverter as is normal but also needs to accept this JSON. Any help is very much appreciated. A: I would be inclined to use a helper method to use the Output writer to use an appropriate util function to format the output. Something like this: public class JsonWriter { public static void write(Object o) { // first use a util that is suitable to convert an object to a Json string // or add an implementation that calls the appropriate function StringWriter writer = new StringWriter(); JsonWriter.writeString(o, new PrintWriter(writer)); // create a readable string from the converted object } public static void writeArray(Object[] o) { StringWriter writer = new StringWriter(); JsonWriter.writeCollection(writer,
