Dota 2, created by Valve, is an eSports-focused action I've been using a few different VR systems over the last couple of weeks now. And as I'm sure most of us do, I had some questions about how the different SteamVR hardware was performing. Using our Sci-Fi VR rig, I also wanted to see how different applications perform in VR. I'm not a qualified professional to review any hardware and my tests tend to be made up of some combination of software I use and have (the only ones I have for the HTC Vive are: Jetpack, Google Earth, Daydream View, Google Play Movies & TV, Google Maps, and more). I also wanted to see how some of my favourite games perform in VR. The Requirements I have two Vives, and to give the maximum experience I used all of the Vive's features. I'll be including a test of the Vive's apps, but I would recommend ensuring that the Vive SDK is up to date, you have downloaded the software for it, and you have Steam's parental controls on. All tests were run on a PC running Windows 7, with a GTX 780. I've not benchmarked the HTC Vive on an AMD system. The Tests I ran two tests, a 360° and a degree test. The 360° test was very quick to run. The 'N' key is used to rotate the display, and the 'Left Mouse' button is used to change direction. To enable you to see the test results, the VR Scoreboard apps records the results into the 'NoVR' column. I think it's important to include the NoVR column as well, to give you an idea of how well the game (and app, for those using an app with full 360° tracking) performs in VR without the display rotation controls that Google Cardboard and the HTC Vive have. Before we get started, I'll be taking a look at the Vive's apps first, as they're probably the most important. The HTC Vive's apps As you may have guessed, the HTC Vive has a whole suite of apps, and I tested those first. I started with the Source SDK games library, which has a very impressive collection of games. I then tested the Real Room app, as this is how it's paired with the Vive and I had already played with that too. Following on

Welcome to the world of master manufacturer. What kind of factories can you build? Will the galaxy be a better place? The game is about the survival of humanity. This means that we have full control of the destiny of the galaxy. We can build factories of any type or size at any place. Don't have a factory? Don't worry. Just build it later. Our purpose is to simulate an extremely large scale industrial complex. We have a wide variety of building units that can be used to build all kinds of factories. Each of those units can be upgraded multiple times. Every factory unit also has its own workshop to build specialized units from the basic factory units. All in all, we have a factory with a lot of potential. Our spaceship race along with the industrial units gain experience and can thus be upgraded up to a certain level. Every newly created factory unit has a small percentage of experience that is shown on the factory unit's portrait. Experience points can be used to upgrade the units and factories. You can only collect experience points by unlocking game achievements. The Factory Must Survive We have a dedicated, fully automated factory driver, the Machine. The Machine, the first artificial general intelligence, is humanity's ultimate invention. It is responsible for the survival of the human species. It's also our world's most dangerous prisoner. The Machine starts the game in a special underground facility in the middle of space. In the beginning, its sole task is to supply the warfront with resources. Along the way, the Machine will have to expand and strengthen its position. It can also be destroyed. If the Machine is destroyed, the Factory will lose all its resources and all units. The Machine is basically a building manager on a small scale. It needs human workers who can provide it with materials and stuff. The Machine can work with generic building blocks, but also a variety of resources. Sometimes, it even needs specialised building blocks for their use. While the Machine commands those building blocks, the building units are actually produced for sale. They're all controlled by the Machine. They're supervised by the Machine, and they must be finished to be sold. Key features planned for the Early Access: New building units, new game mechanics, new game environments, new story elements, more world generation tech, new AI mechanics, new multiplayer, more survival mechanics, AI personalities, new dialogue, scenarios and more! The first game version will feature a single player campaign, limited cooperative gameplay, a

What's new:

The Chiltern Main Line is one of only three routes in the Transport for London Underground network, and the only London and South East route which still operates trains that were built without a control cab, featuring a driving compartment made up of two open ends and a roving or exposed second class coach. It is the busiest line in the network, and the second most-overcrowded (after the Victoria line). It carries some of the oldest rolling stock in the London and Thameside network. You are free to purchase the route add-on at a discounted rate through my own website, including airfreight and postage within Australia. PLEASE NOTE Currently, the add-on is only available within Australia. This add-on is bundled with the main base game and features almost two years of additional content, including four new models of stock to enhance the line as it was during these years; the replacement of over 585 operational carriages; and many other improvements both generally and specifically to the Chiltern route. For more information and photographs of the new models in operation on the line, click here. The Chiltern Main Line is part of an expanded world, which also includes the Southern part of the West Coast Main Line as well as connections to other lines in the main rail network of Europe and North America, and the Disneyland Resort and other locations through the North American Disney Partnership programme of Amstrad. Please see the included map for details of those locations. The model lacks track curves, which are added to true mainline track as trains approach a turn. This means that the model is not equivalent in scale to a true mainline network like Scotland, the West Coast Main Line, or the main rail network of Europe, but overcomes this problem with the new models of stock it features as well as the new signalling of the Chiltern Main Line. Please note that, while the scenery pieces provided are very generally developed, much of the detail in the towns and local businesses, smaller stations and other features has been added by the purchaser. In comparison with the main game, the new version of the Chiltern Main Line features a model of locations that are slightly altered, and altogether, there have been some significant changes in the routing of the line and the locations of populated areas (such as RAF Odiham). Furthermore, major changes to the operating policy of the line have been made for this game, with
